

CONTENTS

	Page
Foreword by Vidar Helgesen	vii
Acronyms	ix
Introduction	1
Chapter 1 Rethinking multilateral negotiations: disarmament as humanitarian action
John Borrie	7
Terms of reference	9
Multilateralism and its discontents	11
Political will	13
A community of practice	15
Complexity	17
Human security?	23
Concluding comment	28
Chapter 2 Modelling armed violence: a tool for humanitarian dialogue in disarmament and arms control
Robin M. Coupland	39
Modelling armed violence and its effects	39
Small arms and light weapons	41
“Non-lethal” weapons	42
Chemical and biological weapons	44
Reasonable use of force	45
Conclusion	47

Chapter 3 Deconstructing disarmament: the challenge of making the disarmament and arms control machinery responsive to the humanitarian imperative
Patrick McCarthy	51
Introduction	51
Derrida and deconstructionism	51
Applying Derrida to disarmament	52
“Traditional” versus “new” approaches to disarmament and arms control.	54
Principal constraints on existing multilateral disarmament machinery	58
Current disarmament and arms control processes	62
Conclusion	63
Chapter 4 A comparison between arms control and other multilateral negotiation processes
Vanessa Martin Randin and John Borrie	67
Introduction	67
Multilateral negotiations in the field of migration, climate change and public health	71
The Conference on Disarmament, the Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons Convention and the Convention on Certain Conventional Weapons since the 1990s	86
Comparing Arms Control Processes with the United Nations Migrant Workers Convention, FCCC and the WHO FCTC . .	104
Conclusions	109
Brief summary report of UNIDIR’s discussion meeting on some alternative approaches in multilateral decision making: disarmament as humanitarian action, 3 November 2004	131
Recent UNIDIR Publications	137